Peace exhibit ends Friday

King Library display praises Gandhi, MLK, Daisaku Ikeda

By Claudia Plascencia
Daily Staff Writer

Going up the escalator from the first floor of the Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Joint Library, an exhibit composed of several curved walls can be seen winding around the study tables of the second floor.

The exhibit is called "Gandhi, King, Ikeda: A Legacy of Building Peace" and will be on display through Friday.

It focuses on the lives of Mohandas Karamchand "Mahatma" Gandhi, Martin Luther King Jr. and Daisaku Ikeda.

Gandhi and King are both known for their work in gaining peace through nonviolence.

Ikeda is currently president of Soka Gakkai International, a Buddhist organization that promotes peace and is one of the sponsors of the exhibit.

"We thought it would be a great exhibit to just be here on campus to create dialogue among students," said Chris Hicks-Riley, administrative support assistant for the communications and public affairs department at San Jose State University.

Hicks-Riley said she is the adviser for World Peace Buddhists, an SJSU student organization, which contacted Lawrence Carter, dean of the Martin Luther King Jr. International Chapel at Morehouse College and creator of the exhibit.

Carter spoke at an event at the library in April where former San Jose Mayor Susan Hammer and Delorme McKee-Stovall, a graduate of SJSU, were both awarded the Gandhi, King, Ikeda Community Builder's Award for their spirit of nonviolence and community involvement, Hicks-Riley said.

"It's wonderful that we're having these kinds of exhibits at the King Library," said Jeff Paul, Cultural Heritage Center librarian at the King Library.

The exhibit is divided into several sections that focus on different themes, such as humanity at the heart, nonviolence, and adversity and resistance.

The walls of the exhibit are covered with vivid photographs of important moments in the lives of the three men, as well as quotes and history about them.

San Jose honors Pat Tillman

More than 3,000 people withstood the 83-degree heat at the San Jose Municipal Rose Garden on Monday to celebrate the life of former NFL safety and U.S. Army Ranger Pat Tillman.

"Pat was not like the rest of us," said master of ceremonies Jim Rome, host of his own nationally syndicated sports radio talk show. "When Pat gave up the NFL to join the Rangers, everyone said, 'How can he do that?' He said, 'How could I not?'"

Tillman, originally from San Jose, was killed in action overseas in Afghanistan, his second tour of duty, on April 22.

The memorial service included speeches by several of Tillman's family members, close friends, coaches, teammates, fellow soldiers and admirers, including Sen. John McCain and the first lady of California, Maria Shriver.

The majority of the speakers recounted personal stories about Tillman, who left a multimillion dollar deal with the Arizona Cardinals in 2002 to enlist with the U.S. Army.

Chad Schwartz, a friend of Tillman for the past 20 years, said his friend would be amazed by the turnout.

"If Pat was here," Schwartz said, "he would

Adams already made a purchase earlier in the day but came back to look at more art pieces. Ceramic Artists Guild holds Spring Art Sale

Glass, pottery pieces include bowls, vases, cups

By Theresa Smith
Daily Staff Writer

The semiannual Spring Art Sale put on by the Ceramic Artists Guild program at San Jose State University takes place this week in the Art Quad.

The artwork displayed inside a white tent consists of handcrafted glass and pottery pieces made by students of the guild program. The exhibit includes glass eggs, ceramic bowls, vases and cups.

Linda Loucks, an employee in common management systems, said she has been attending the art exhibit at SJSU for 16 years.

"The work is done by the students and this is a great way to support them," she said.

Loucks, who bought eight items from the exhibit, said the prices can't be beat.

Allen Chen, a senior majoring in fine arts and an artist for the exhibit, said he has 80 pieces on display.

"I'm honored to have my work on display," he said. "The best part about it is people look at it every day."

Schwarzenegger visits U.S. troops

Associated Press

RAMSTEIN AIR BASE, Germany — Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger met with wounded U.S. troops and escaped hostage Thomas Hamill on Monday after talks with Jordan's King Abdullah II.

Schwarzenegger told reporters he "talked about the situation in the Middle East" during a private visit with Abdullah at Jordan's royal palace. The celebrity governor arranged the stop after criticism from some Arab-Americans that his trip to Israel didn't include meetings with Palestinian groups.

Schwarzenegger said Monday he supports the creation of a Palestinian state and that Palestinians "were not forgotten" on his trip. But he noted that "we got no invitation" to meet with any Arab group. "We are ready to meet anybody, any group, at any time," the governor said.

He spoke with Hamill for about five minutes in a room at the U.S. military's Landstuhl Regional Medical Center, and said the 43-year-old civilian contractor appeared to be in good health.

"I just tried to let him know we support him and good luck," Schwarzenegger said. "It must be unbelievable to be under the threat of maybe dying," he said, referring to Hamill's three weeks in captivity in Iraq. Hamill escaped his kidnappers over the weekend and was being treated at the base for a gunshot wound.

The movie star-turned-politician said it was a coincidence that the two were at the hospital at the same time, and that

OXYMORON

Gullible Americans sucked in by the mass media

Before I backpacked across Europe by myself for three months in 2001, I was afraid that I might be raped, robbed or rejected by Europeans because I am American.

After having a positive, life-changing experience, however, with nothing bad happening to me, I wondered where that fear came from. I realized the fear largely came from those who expressed their "concern" for me — a young, vulnerable woman — in their opinion. Many of these people, however, had never been to Europe.

Where did their fear come from, and why did they consider themselves knowledgeable about a place where they, in fact, never had a first-hand, eyewitness account?

Could it be that spectators who were so surprised to hear that I would travel to Europe alone actually learned all their information from television? Could it be that the 30-second clips on the news and the so-called in-depth coverage about Europe were enough to educate and make experts of those who fear international travel?

This fear, as it turns out, is directly related to the mass media.

In an article by David L. Altheide, "Mass Media, Crime, and the Fear of Discourse," he concludes that while fear is accumulated and later examined during our social and life experiences, fear ultimately prevents us from living our lives.

"...Fears limit our lives and make us vulnerable to tyrants who would 'save us,'" Altheide writes.

It is in this context that I am not surprised at the responses I've received lately when announcing my trip to the Middle East this summer.

Proudly, I purchased my plane ticket to Amman, Jordan, to experience the culture, absorb the heat, prove the dangerous rumors wrong and explore the lands in Jarash, Petra, Amman and Wadi Rum, with the possibilities of skipping off to Israel and Egypt.

Surprisingly, however, there are not as many people as excited as I am. Even more discouraging, much like the so-called European-TV-watching experts, those who have never traveled to the Middle East advised me not to go because, surely, I will get bombed, killed and raped, because, as "everyone knows," they hate Americans.

Conversely, those who have traveled or are from the region are excited for me, reassuring me of the wonderful time I will have.

The no-traveling experts, however, make up a large majority of our American population.

Altheide suggests that the reactions of the TV-watching experts are natural when responding to something feared.

"For many people, the mass media in general, and the news media in particular, are a 'window' on the world," he writes, explaining that what is shown several times on television is often construed as fact. Eventually, viewers trust the media as portraying the most accurate and important events.

However, by examining several statistics, we see how, in fact, the media injects its viewers with doses of unnecessary fear.

Consider these facts regarding local news coverage: 40 percent of the stories last 30 seconds or less; one in four stories is about crime, law or courts; less than 1 percent of stories could be called investigative; out of 6,000 stories studied, only nine dealt with poverty, welfare and homelessness; the arts and culture stories accounted for 24 stories out of 6,000; the most common people shown on TV news stories, other than criminals and suspects, are crime victims or their families.

In addition, Altheide notes, the very rare are assumed to be common occurrences.

For example, if a suicide bomber blows himself up in Iraq and kills five other people, and it is the third in three months but the fifth in 20 years, it would be perceived as a normal occurrence by the media when it is still a rarity.

And this is the media that is controlling our lives, our perspectives and our futures.

Well, it's not going to dictate mine.

JENNIFER MCCLAIN

At what point do Americans, and humans, let fear dictate their own curiosity?

While some may consider me naive, I consider those who depend on fear-inducing news clips gullible. Aren't people curious about social and cultural values in the Middle East? Surely, there is more to the region than violence, contrary to the media portrayals.

Many Americans are so self-consumed and gullible that they are too scared to get out of their domestic walls created by the government, the media and the powerful.

And while I might be putting myself in danger, as the so-called experts profess, I would at the very least get a first-hand experience, rather than relying on the propaganda we are blanketed with.

If our president is lying to his citizens, why should we believe those who work under him (the media)?

Americans need to learn how to turn the TV off, get off their couches and experience the vastness of the world.

For those who don't — ignorance is bliss.

NO MUSIC, NO LIFE

The repercussions of rising heat affects all

The sun has been shining ever so brightly lately in our economically stable San Jose, and while I am enjoying it, I wonder if global warming is slowly wreaking havoc upon us.

The record-breaking temperatures here and in Santa Cruz are not just a coincidence and are making it time to break out the suntan lotion a little early.

Realistically, we need to be concerned and pay attention to our environment, and I stress that collectively it is our mother earth, as she reaches her — what is it — millionth birthday.

We need to acknowledge that our irresponsibilities will result in a planet that we took for granted and will have left it a wasteland for future generations.

The battle is divided into two components — those who want to ignore the problem and those who want to combat it.

There are still many of us who are too consumed in our daily routines and take for granted, while in our little bubbles, the quick and easy fixes — convenience stores, clean water in multiple faucets in our homes, clean air, gasoline stations, fast food, shopping malls ...

Our country has it made, so while we live extravagantly, we need to look outside our comfort zones to recognize we are becoming detrimental to ourselves.

We forget (or simply ignore) that our planet is shifting toward a scenario that, once arrived at, will be too late to fix.

On a KQED special called "Rising Waters," many citizens from Island States communicated the problems their homelands are currently experiencing through global warming, like erosion and a rise in sea level.

"Rising Waters" gave evidence that Island States would be the first to feel the wrath of global warming and at a fast rate that may cause their exile to "higher grounds."

The United States too has faced inundation through global warming in the state of New York, according to the special.

Manhattan, which is also an island, endured flooding in 1992, and scientist Vivien Gornitz from Columbia University warned that the storms will not be as frequent, however more threatening when they do occur.

The United States coastlines will be the first to be affected, said World Wildlife Fund climate policy officer Jennifer Morgan. She said we can begin with changes that will make our country more efficient through the reduction of greenhouse gases and sport utility vehicles, as well as a plan that will reduce the emissions of carbon dioxide from power plants.

As world leaders continue to meet to obtain a global climate treaty, lobbyists from the coal, fossil fuel and oil industries say the United States will lose jobs and want time to make marketable products to adjust to the severities of global warming.

As they scramble to find ways to transition, those industries continue the emission of pollutants into the air. While many proponents of the global climate treaty argue that those economic losses are exaggerated, they do not point out the gains.

One environmentalist from "Rising Waters" suggests the economy can redistribute the losses and gains through the United States' transition.

For example, he said the high technology industry and the natural gas combined cycle power plants will boost jobs through wind and solar machines and new fuel-cell cars.

As I searched the Internet for more facts, I found the Web site globalwarming.org, and the facts on this site puzzled me. The site was holding a conference titled, "to dispel the myths of global warming."

Global warming isn't a myth, and the repercussions are slowly affecting our comfort zones.

And hey, if there is a trashcan or an ashtray near you, please use it; also, recycle this newspaper when you are done with it.

"It's really interesting because I really didn't know anything about Gandhi, and this tells me something about what he did to try to build peace," said Ara Deylan, a junior majoring in kinesiology. "All in all, it's very educational."

One student said she was taking the escalators and was on her way to the fourth floor when she noticed the exhibit.

"What attracted me were the photographs," said Madhuri Chakraborty, a graduate student working toward her master's in business administration. "There's a lot of information."

Paul said the exhibit involves ideas that are a part of the mission of the library's Cultural Heritage Center, because it embraces diversity and nonviolence.

He said he had some initial concerns about the costs to set up and take down the exhibit, but he later found out that Soka Gakkai International would take care of it.

He also said one faculty member was concerned about comparing Ikeda to Gandhi and King and the behavior of some of Ikeda's religious organizations in the past.

"Mr. Ikeda's religious groups had a lot to say about the exhibit," Paul said. "I think that Mr. Ikeda's organization put a lot of money together to bring it here."

Despite the concerns of one faculty member, Paul said he has not heard of any other criticisms about the exhibit.

"It's a wonderful exhibit," Paul said. "Its merits are much greater than any reservations I have about it."

Hicks-Riley said Ikeda was chosen for this exhibit because of what he stands for.

"Carter decided to also incorporate a person who was living, and Ikeda was looked at as being a person who stands for nonviolence and peace," Hicks-Riley said. "Ikeda is a living embodiment of those men and their spirit of nonviolence."

Jessica Thompson, a graduate student in education, said she knew about Gandhi and King but she found it interesting to learn about Ikeda.

"These ideas of nonviolence and tolerance are so pertinent, and it's a good opportunity to learn more," Thompson said.

Alka Takhar, a graduate student working toward her teaching credential, said she went to the exhibit to learn more about Ikeda and found the three men are all very similar, except they are from different cultures and religions.

"They have similar thoughts about humanity and peace," Takhar said.

The exhibit is on display through Friday during library hours and is free to the public.

Seven U.S. service members reprimanded in alleged abuse of Iraqi prisoners

Associated Press

BAGHDAD — The U.S. military has reprimanded seven soldiers in the alleged abuse of inmates at Baghdad's notorious Abu Ghraib prison, the first known punishments in the case, an official said Monday. Two of the soldiers were relieved of their duties.

The American officer who oversaw the prison said many more troops might have been involved.

The soldiers were reprimanded on the orders of Lt. Gen. Ricardo Sanchez, commander of U.S. forces in Iraq. Six of them — officers and noncommissioned officers — received the most severe administrative reprimand in the U.S. military, a military official said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

A seventh soldier received a more lenient admonishment.

Two of the six were "released for cause," meaning they were relieved of their duties and reassigned "with prejudice," said Larry Di Rita, spokesman for Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld. He also said that the six who received letters of reprimand were from a military police unit.

"There may well be additional decisions" about disciplinary action against others as a result of the investigation," Di Rita added.

The official said he believed the seven officers would not face further action or court martial, but the reprimands could mean the end of their careers.

Another six U.S. servicemembers — all military police — also may face criminal charges.

President Bush called Rumsfeld before a campaign trip Monday and urged him to make sure the U.S. soldiers are punished, White House spokesman Scott McClellan said.

"The president wanted to make sure appropriate action is being taken against those responsible for these shameful and appalling acts," he said.

The U.S.-appointed Iraqi Governing Council joined the chorus of international criticism of the alleged abuse, terming it a violation of international law and the Geneva Conventions.

The council demanded that U.S. authorities allow Iraqi judges to take part in the interrogation of prisoners and open the detention centers to inspection by Iraqi officials.

At a news conference in Baghdad, Iraqi Foreign Minister Hoshiyar Zibari condemned the alleged abuse and called for an independent inquiry.

Brig. Gen. Janis Karpinski, who oversaw the prison, said that she did not know about the prisoner abuse while it was happening.

"They were despicable acts," Karpinski said Monday on ABC's "Good Morning America." "Had I known anything about it, I certainly would have reacted very quickly." Karpinski, commander of the 800th Military Police Brigade, said one photograph from the prison appeared to show more Americans involved in the alleged abuse than the six MPs who have been charged.

"One photograph showed — it didn't show faces completely, but the photograph showed 32 boots," Karpinski told ABC. "I'm saying other people than the military police."

It wasn't clear if that would include the seven soldiers reprimanded.

Brig. Gen. Mark Kimmitt, chief U.S. military spokesman in Iraq, said on ABC that he isn't sure Army military intelligence "had anything to do with the individual acts of criminal behavior" as Karpinski and others have alleged. Kimmitt said, however, that the investigation is reviewing "concerns expressed about the military intelligence."

Last week, CBS' "60 Minutes II" broadcast images allegedly showing Iraqis stripped naked, hooded and being tormented by their U.S. captors.

An internal U.S. Army report found that Iraqi detainees were subjected to "sadistic, blatant and wanton criminal abuses," according to The New Yorker magazine.

A British newspaper also published photos purporting to show members of a British Army regiment abusing prisoners, but a former commander of the unit said Monday that the photos had "too many inconsistencies" to be genuine.

The Daily Mirror newspaper stood by the photos, which allegedly show a hooded Iraqi being pushed, threatened and urinated on by a soldier from the Queen's Lancashire Regiment.

Col. David Black, who led the regiment in the 1980s, told British Broadcasting Corp. television that equipment and a truck pictured in the photos had not been used by the regiment in Iraq.

He said he did not believe the photos had been taken in the Middle Eastern country.

"The evidence we have seen so far looking at the photographs, there are too many inconsistencies," he said.

Ketchup company spreads word it is not involved in campaign

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — H. J. Heinz Co. is in a pickle.

The Pittsburgh-based foodmaker has been deluged with e-mails from unhappy consumers who want to know why it's involved in the presidential campaign.

The company's emphatic answer is, "We're not," and has hired some big-time Republican lobbyists to help spread the word.

"We make ketchup; we don't make politics," asserts Jack Smyth, a Heinz senior vice president.

Still, it's easy to see why customers might think otherwise. The multimillionaire wife of Sen. John F. Kerry, the Democrats' presumptive presidential nominee, is often referred to in the press as "the ketchup heiress." Teresa Heinz Kerry is the widow of Sen. H. John Heinz III, R-Pa., whose great-grandfather founded the company 135 years ago. She flies around the country in a red and white Gulfstream jet with "57" in its tail number.

In March, the Republican National Committee briefly posted on its Web site a report that said that H.J. Heinz had laid off hundreds of U.S. workers while adding workers to its factories abroad. The implication, which Heinz strongly denies, was that the company associated closely with Teresa Kerry was exporting American jobs in precisely the way her husband decries on the campaign trail.

Now the company is working overtime to prove that it's neither exporting jobs nor taking sides in the presidential race. No consumer products company wants to be identified with any particular party because its success demands that it attracts customers across the political spectrum.

The Heinz company's Web site prominently includes a feature titled "Heinz Confirms Its Widely Held Public Ownership and Its Non-Partisan Status." The text begins: "In light of some misleading speculation, the H.J. Heinz Company would like to make clear that neither Mrs. Teresa Heinz Kerry, Senator John Kerry nor any member of their family is involved in the management or board of the H.J. Heinz Company."

Jon Dunlavy, a senior majoring in spatial arts and a volunteer for the exhibit, said they usually have the exhibit a week before Mother's Day and the last month of the semester.

"The average price for a piece is between $20 and $40," Dunlavy said. "Thirty percent of the money from the exhibit goes to supporting the Ceramic Guild — the program gets a lot of regular artists."

The individual artists decide upon the prices for their pieces, ranging from $1 to $200. Chen said when thinking of prices, he considers the students and what people can afford.

"The most extreme prices are the bigger bowls," Dunlavy said. "The prices are based on how much work is put into the piece and how long it takes to complete it."

Dunlavy said everything is reasonably priced at the exhibit and is cheaper than at other exhibits.

Angie Kim, a senior majoring in design, said she also supports the exhibit every year.

"The prices are really affordable, and I'm an art student, so I want to support them," she said.

Roger Lee, a senior majoring in fine arts and a volunteer for the exhibit, said patrons can handle the artwork at the exhibit.

"Everything here is on sale for the people," Lee said. "They can look at it, touch it, handle it and see if they like it."

Lee said the money from the exhibit goes to the guild program and it helps pay for equipment, materials and maintenance.

"We receive a lot of support from the faculty and artists. Some donate their work to the guild," he said.

Craig Yamato, a senior majoring in art, said this year he purchased a vase for his mother.

"I got my mother a vase last year and she loved it," Yamato said. "I am in a ceramics class and I am here to support my classmates."

To avoid a repetitious job of taking the pieces to and from the tent, the guild has a night volunteer who guards the art pieces in the tent overnight, Lee said.

"We put a lot of commitment toward this event," Lee said. "This is months' worth of work put into this."

The art exhibit will run from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. today and Wednesday and from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Thursday.

SJSU hits the road this week at Stanford, Fresno

By Mark Cornejo
Daily Senior Staff Writer

The Spartan baseball team begins an eight-game road trip tonight at Stanford University, and then continues on to Fresno State University for a three-game set this weekend.

SPARTAN BASEBALL

NOTEBOOK

San Jose State University meets up with the No. 1 Cardinal at 6 p.m. at the Sunken Diamond in Palo Alto.

SJSU head coach Sam Piraro said he was realistic about the 19-25-1 (7-14 in the Western Athletic Conference) Spartans' chances against 35-6 Stanford, who took back the top spot in the nation this week.

"We'll be going in overmatched," Piraro said. "It's going to be a challenge."

The Cardinal shut out the Spartans 5-0 in their first matchup on March 30 at Municipal Stadium.

Spartan first baseman Scott Niheu, a fifth-year senior, said it's important for this young team to be confident when facing an opponent like Stanford.

"When you play teams like Rice (University) or Stanford," Niheu said, "you can't get intimidated. We just need to go in there like we're going to win."

Piraro said the Spartans will be at even more of a disadvantage as they will be without several of their top pitchers, including Brad Kilby and Jose Amaya.

Piraro said that, because both pitchers racked up more innings than he would have liked them to this weekend, they may not be ready to pitch tonight.

"We'll see what happens," Piraro said. "We'll rally around whoever's out there. A break here, a break there — we'll see what happens."

This weekend, the Spartans will travel down to Fresno for a three-game series beginning at 6:35 p.m. on Friday at Beiden Field, continuing at 6:35 p.m. on Saturday and wrapping up at 1 p.m. on Sunday.

"It's a hell of a place to play," Piraro said. "It's hard to win there. I've taken some really good teams down there and got swept."

Niheu said it's difficult to play in Fresno because of the large crowds and the fact that the 20-27 (8-10 in WAC) Bulldogs are able to capitalize on the home-field advantage.

"Fresno State's tough and they draw big crowds," Niheu said. "The fans are all over you and Fresno always plays tough there."

The Bulldogs took the first series of the season, 2-1. Fresno won the first and third games 4-2 and 5-2 respectively, while the Spartans took the second game 5-3.

Niheu said the key to the Spartans' success in Fresno will depend on self-confidence and forgetting about what happened in the past.

"Every game you have to take in that mentality that you're going to win," Niheu said.

Piraro said it will take more than just playing a good game to win in Fresno.

"They've got a lot of talent down there, and we're short-handed," Piraro said. "We're going to need some guys to step up and have big games."

New faces in the starting lineup

Two of the players who Piraro said will need to come up big are back ups Niheu and catcher Justin Santich-Hughes.

Spartan starting first baseman Brandon Fromm was hit in the wrist by a pitch on Friday against Sacramento State University.

Piraro said he doesn't know exactly what's wrong or when he'll be available next.

Niheu, who hadn't started a game until this season, said this opportunity Spartan first baseman Scott Niheu, a fifth-year senior, catches the ball and goes to apply a tag against Sacramento State University on Saturday at Municipal Stadium. Niheu is expected to start tonight at Stanford University in place of injured first baseman Brandon Fromm. First pitch is scheduled for 6 p.m. at the Sunken Diamond.

gives him the chance to be a leader on the field after spending the last four seasons being a leader on the bench.

"I've earned a lot of respect from the guys for what I do on the bench," Niheu said. "Now, I'm just trying to produce — trying to show a lot of the younger guys the right way to do things."

Piraro said there weren't too many players he has more respect for than Niheu, and he is thankful to have a man of his caliber in a Spartan uniform.

"I believe God rewards good people," Piraro said. "Here's a guy who hasn't had a start until this year, but he's one of the classiest guys I've ever met and a real team leader on the bench. Nowadays that's a rarity."

The other key injury, Piraro said, is the loss of catcher Mark Bautista, who was hit on the hand by a bat in Saturday's game.

Piraro said the hand is fractured and that Bautista could be out for the rest of the season.

Bautista started all but two of the Spartans' 45 games before the injury. Santich-Hughes said he's confident he can pick up right where Bautista left off.

"When I've gotten my opportunities, I think I've played pretty well," Santich-Hughes said. "(The coaches) have worked me in slow, an inning here and there, and kind of proved to me that I can run this team."

Piraro said he's been pleased with Santich-Hughes' play this season, but he is worried about the lack of depth at the catcher position.

"We're down to a walk-on catcher," Piraro said. "He's caught wonderfully, but we're now down to only one guy."

Men's golf in second place at WAC tourney

Daily Staff Report

The San Jose State University men's golf team sits in second place Monday after day one of the Western Athletic Conference golf championships in Fresno.

SPARTAN ROUNDUP

The Spartans shot an even-par 284, led by Bobby Powers, who shot a three-under-par 68 to place third individually after the first 18 holes.

Powers is just one shot behind co-leaders Will Dobson of Southern Methodist University and David Inglis of the University of Tulsa, who both shot a four-under-par 67.

Spartan Isaac Weintraub shot a one-under-par 70 to finish tied for sixth place after the first day of competition.

SMU takes a healthy seven-shot lead into the second day of the championships, shooting a seven-under-par 277.

Fresno State is tied with SJSU for second place, also shooting an even-par 284.

Women's soccer announces 13 new players

The Spartan women's soccer team announced that 13 new players have signed letters of intent to play for SJSU during the 2004-05 season.

Forwards Nicole Irwin and Meaghan Norbeck and defender Kristin Krale are all coming to SJSU from the Olympic development program.

Irwin won three consecutive league championships at Dublin High School and was named one of the 2003 "Top 100 prep athletes" by the Contra Costa Times.

Norbeck is transferring to SJSU from Palomar College after being named "Offensive Player of the Year" in the Pacific Coast Conference last season.

Krale played at Independence High School in San Jose and will join her sister, Kara, on the Spartan women's soccer team next season for new head coach Dave Siragusa.

The Spartans also announced the signings of 10 other players — midfielders Karin Karlsson and Julie Zabek, defenders Jackie Cruz, Samantha Kinneman, Kelly Madej, Erica Ng-Pinkerton, Tasha Vandixhorn and Amanda Villa, plus forwards Jennifer Domencini and Cynthia Pinkney.

UTEP leaving the WAC

The University of Texas-El Paso recently announced that it has accepted an invitation to join Conference USA beginning July 1, 2005, for the 2005-06 season.

UTEP will join three other current WAC teams that will make the jump to Conference USA on the same day. Rice University, Tulsa and Southern Methodist University all accepted invitations to join the conference earlier this year.

In response, the WAC has invited New Mexico State University and Utah State University to join the conference effective July 1, 2005.

This would leave the WAC with just eight teams next season instead of the ten members it currently has.

SJSU, Fresno State, the University of Hawai'i, Louisiana Tech University, Boise State University and the University of Nevada-Reno are currently scheduled to remain in the WAC beyond July 2005.

Sosa, Lee power Cubs past Cardinals 7-3

Maddux pitches seven innings, gets a hit and steals a bag in Chicago win

Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Greg Maddux put on a triple-threat performance: He helped beat the St. Louis Cardinals with his arm, bat and legs.

Maddux pitched seven strong innings, stole a base, got an infield hit and scored twice in the Chicago Cubs' 7-3 victory over the Cardinals on Monday.

"It was a great day for Greg," manager Dusty Baker said. "This guy comes to compete and tries to beat you any way he can."

Sammy Sosa, Todd Walker and Derrek Lee homered for the Cubs, who split the four-game series despite scoring a total of only 14 runs.

The games drew a total of 181,826 fans — an average of 45,456 per game.

For Walker, the setting reminded him of last fall when he was with the Red Sox.

"This series reminds me a lot of playing the Yankees last year in the championship series, the same identical thing almost," Walker said. "I think it prepares you for when you get to the playoffs."

"This is a little more mild-tempered than in Boston and New York where you've got people beating each other up in the stands, and that type of stuff."

Albert Pujols hit a solo homer for the Cardinals and also flied out twice to the warning track.

Jim Edmonds added a solo shot in the eighth off Cubs reliever Francis Beltran.

Maddux (2-2) outpitched former Braves teammate Jason Marquis for his 291st career victory. He allowed two runs and seven hits, walking none and striking out six.

"I didn't see too much of the apprentice," Maddux said.

"I pull for him. I watched him come up and he's a guy I'm sure I'll continue to pull for as long as he's playing," he said.

Maddux entered the game with an uncharacteristically high 5.65 ERA. His third straight solid outing left him with a 5.05 ERA.

"He had so much movement on the ball today, it just made you think he was cheating," said the Cardinals' Reggie Sanders, who was 0-for-3 and didn't get the ball out of the infield.

"We know he wasn't cheating, but it just made you feel that way," Sanders said.

The Cardinals said Maddux really stepped it up a notch with runners on base.

"When it really gets tight and he needs to make a pitch, he brings out stuff that you haven't seen the whole game," said Mike Matheny, who was 2-for-3 with a double.

"He has a very good idea of what he wants to do, and he usually executes," he said.

Walker was 3-for-5 with three RBI, including a run-scoring single in the third after Maddux reached on a forceout and stole the sixth base of his career.

Walker's two-run homer broke a 1-all tie in the sixth. Maddux reached on an infield single near the third-base line that deflected off Marquis' glove, and Walker hit his third homer.

Lee hit a two-run shot in the eighth.

Sosa connected for a two-run drive in the ninth, his sixth homer of the season and 545th of his career.

Sosa also doubled and got his only RBI of the series.

"I've got to fight for my stuff. It's always been like that," he said.

The Cubs won for only the seventh time in their last 34 games at Busch Stadium since 2000.

Marquis (1-2), who considers Maddux a mentor, matched the four-time Cy Young winner at the plate with a bunt single and his first career steal.

It was a challenge for Marquis, pitching against Maddux.

"Greg is Greg, he's always going to be efficient," Marquis said. "He wants you to swing the bat, he trusts his defense and he trusts what he is going to throw."

After a leadoff double by Matheny in the third, Marquis bunted.

Maddux took too much time checking third base before throwing late to first, and Tony Womack followed with a sacrifice fly to tie it at 1.

Hamill requested the visit after learning from military officials that Schwarzenegger was there.

He also cheered up hundreds of troops on the base with a speech in which he shared humorous tales of his experiences in the Austrian military, bodybuilding and politics.

"I play the Terminator, I play the commando," he said to loud applause. "You are the true action heroes."

Airman 1st Class Jonathan Ivy of Lovejoy, Ga., said Schwarzenegger was "the first celebrity here since I've been here. It lifts morale. I love his movies."

Staff Sgt. Ronnie Caballero of New Orleans came with his wife and 9-month-old son.

"He's one of my role models. He's doing a great job in California. ... he's real people, he's not like other politicians making money," said Caballero, holding a magazine photo of Schwarzenegger he hoped to get autographed.

The governor — on his first trip overseas as an elected official — appeared on a stage in a hangar with dozens of airmen before a huge American flag. Portions of his remarks were broadcast live in parts of California and on national U.S. news networks.

"I have to say that my career in the military was not spotless," Schwarzenegger told the crowd. "There was one night when I woke up in the morning and my tank was gone. I forgot to put the right gear in there and it rolled into the river in front of us. That's where I found it the next morning."

The governor followed his speech with the more somber task of visiting wounded soldiers at the base hospital. He flew out Monday evening, Ramstein spokesman Maj. Mike Young said.

Schwarzenegger had earlier been in Tel Aviv and Jerusalem, where he paid tribute to the millions of Jews killed in the Holocaust and helped dedicate a planned museum of tolerance.

In Jordan, Schwarzenegger had lunch with Abdullah and gave the king a large sculpture of a seashell carved out of redwood. On the menu was pan-fried salmon, beef, Cajun chicken and spaghetti. The king is a personal friend of the governor and had previously visited Schwarzenegger's Los Angeles home.

humbly thank each and every one of you, even if it took till four in the morning. That's just the kind of guy Pat was."

Shriver spoke on behalf of her husband, Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, who couldn't be at the event because he was in Germany visiting U.S. soldiers.

In the letter read aloud by Shriver, Schwarzenegger said he was surprised to find out he had been one of Tillman's boyhood idols, saying, "It is I who admire him."

McCain spoke next and said that even though he had never met Tillman he had a great respect for the man.

"I never had the honor of meeting Pat Tillman," the senator said. "But by all accounts, it would have been an honor to call him a friend."

McCain added that all people could learn from Tillman.

"I will remember Pat Tillman as an Army Ranger," McCain said. "But I will also remember him as a reminder that many of us will have a longer life than he did, but very few of us will live a better one."

Steve White, a soldier who served with Tillman in his first tour in Iraq, shed some light on the moments leading up to Tillman's death.

"When you're ambushed as he was, there are only a few things you can do to better your chances of survival," White said. "One of which is getting away from the target of the ambush."

White said Tillman stayed on the ambushed truck to give the other American soldiers enough time to flee.

"He directly saved those men's lives," White concluded.

Isaac Long, a senior kinesiology major at San Jose State University, was one of the thousands of people in attendance.

"I'm against war," Long said. "But I have to respect a man who died for what he believed in. He was a true American hero."

Rome spoke about the meaning of "hero" in sports, and how he believes the word is misused.

"Hitting a game-winning three-pointer at the buzzer doesn't make you a hero, it makes you clutch," Rome said. "Pat Tillman is a hero."

Rome added that he will be proud to tell his son that he knew Tillman.

"I made a choice a long time ago that the first athlete I tell my son about will be Pat Tillman," Rome said. "I can't wait to sit him down and tell him about Pat. I want my son to be like Pat. In fact, I don't want to be like Mike, I want to be like Pat."

Four of Tillman's former coaches spoke at the service, including former Arizona Cardinals head coach Dave McGinnis.

"Honor, integrity, dignity," McGinnis said. "They're not just adjectives — they were his life."

McGinnis told the story of the last time he saw Tillman, which was in a locker room in Seattle during Tillman's break between military tours. Tillman had just visited with the team after a game with the Seattle Seahawks.

"When he left the locker room in Seattle," McGinnis said, "he thanked me for letting him talk to the team. I said, 'No Pat, thank you.' Those were the last words I ever said to him."

Tillman's father, Pat Tillman Sr., was the final speaker, taking his time to thank several people for all the help they have given him and his family since his son's death.

Joseph Frankina, who played football with Tillman and Tillman's younger brother, Kevin, at Leland High School in San Jose, said he was touched by the service.

"I thought it was beautiful," Frankina said. "This wasn't the kind of turnout I expected. I was proud to see all these people I grew up with here today."

The ceremony wrapped up with two Army Rangers delivering a folded American flag to Tillman's parents and wife, Marie.

"... I have to respect a man who died for what he believed in."
